Copyright Policies

Copyright Policy for the Journal of Management Perspectives (IJMP)

1. Copyright Ownership

- Upon acceptance for publication, authors are required to transfer copyright of their manuscripts to the Journal of Management Perspectives (JMP). This copyright transfer grants the journal exclusive rights to publish, reproduce, and distribute the work in any form and medium, both now and in the future.
- This transfer of copyright is intended to facilitate the widest dissemination of the research, ensuring that the journal maintains control over how the work is shared, while upholding the authors' rights to use their own work.

2. Author Rights

- Although copyright is transferred to the journal, authors retain the following rights to their work:
 - Reuse in Scholarly Work: Authors may use all or part of their published work in future scholarly publications, such as books, dissertations, and conference presentations, with appropriate attribution to the original journal publication.
 - Repository Sharing: Authors are permitted to share the published version (or post-print) of their article on personal websites, institutional repositories, or non-commercial academic networks, as long as a proper citation is provided linking back to the journal and acknowledging JMP as the original publisher.
 - Educational and Research Use: Authors may use their published work for classroom teaching, research collaborations, and academic course packs, provided appropriate credit is given to JMP.

3. Licensing Terms

- Published articles will be distributed under a [specific license, e.g., Creative Commons Attribution License (CC-BY 4.0)], allowing others to share, adapt, and build upon the work, provided the original authors and source are credited appropriately.

- This license enables greater flexibility for academic sharing and adaptation while ensuring attribution to authors and the journal. Any specific licensing terms will be clearly indicated on each article.

4. Commercial Use

- The use of published work for commercial purposes by third parties (e.g., republishing, commercial compilations, or distribution) may require prior written permission from JMP.
- Authors acknowledge that the journal retains the right to negotiate and authorize commercial usage agreements, ensuring that any financial or commercial benefits from the published work are appropriately managed and shared, where applicable.

5. Self-Archiving Policy

- Authors are encouraged to archive their manuscripts in institutional repositories, personal websites, or other non-commercial repositories following publication, in line with JMP's open access policy.
- Self-archiving must adhere to the following conditions:
 - Preprint Version: Authors may post their submitted version (pre-peer review) at any time with an acknowledgment that the article is under review with JMP.
 - Accepted Version (Post-Print): Authors may share the accepted, peer-reviewed version on personal or institutional platforms following an embargo period if applicable.
 - Published Version: Authors may share the final published version with proper citation and journal attribution, in accordance with any stipulated embargo or licensing conditions.

6. Responsibility and Agreement

- By submitting their work to JMP, authors agree to comply with the journal's copyright and licensing policies, promoting responsible dissemination while protecting their intellectual property.
- Authors also assume responsibility for ensuring that they have obtained the necessary permissions for any third-party content (e.g., images, data sets) included in their submission.

7. Copyright Infringement and Plagiarism

- JMP is committed to upholding high ethical standards and reserves the right to take action in cases of copyright infringement or plagiarism.
- Authors are expected to provide original content, and in cases where previously published material is reused, proper permissions must be obtained, and sources must be cited.
- Any claims of copyright infringement or plagiarism post-publication will be thoroughly investigated by the editorial board and may lead to retraction, notice of correction, or other corrective measures.

Agreement By submitting their work, authors agree to abide by these copyright policies and licensing terms, promoting responsible sharing and distribution of research while protecting both the authors' and the journal's intellectual property rights.
